“ I admired the man from the very first time I was introduced to him by my friend, Monti at her restaurant called Montserrat right there in the heart of South Street. And Lou and I grew to be fast friends. It was one of the best things that ever happened to my life. Lou had a certain regal flair to his soul, an interesting way of looking at life, dissecting all of its problems - and solving a few - all the while maintaining such charm, a lovely disposition, kindness, compassion, and heart. I used to tease him and call him The Emperor, or Oh Great One... Both, of course, he dearly loved - and deserved. We worked together, had fun together, and not only did we become lifelong friends... I was also gifted with the addition of the real love of his life, and his husband, my friend, Francisco. The loss of this glorious man is now heaven's gain. I will forever love him, and forever treasure the friendship that still lives on deep within me. ... Until we meet again my precious and glorious 'Leo' friend. ...Love, always and forever... And then some. * Judy *
